All Inclusive IT Guidance for Your Organization

On average 70% of projects fail. The failure of IT costs in the U.S. economy is about $50-$150 billion annually.

Many technology executives are asking themselves “what can I do to be better?” to be more nimble to my customers; to provide a higher level of service to the business, and be more responsive across teams. In fact, 60% of CIOs are implementing some form of service improvement or model (such as ITIL, ITIL-lite, or CMMI) to address these challenges. Yet sadly, 90% of these same CIOs aren’t making much progress.

One reason is that many organizations lack the organizational maturity to make process improvements and change adoptable. Some believe that a software tool will “save the day” without recognizing that the tool is only as good as the processes and policies developed up stream to feed the tool. Some service models take years to establish lasting change. And some try and “do too much, too fast”.

It doesn’t have to be this way. There is a way to experience process improvement that is:

- > Simple
- > Adoptable
- > Manageable
- > Minimally disruptive
- > Repeatable
- > Measurable
- > Low Cost
- > And Customized to your organization
